

San Francisco wants both of the political conventions next year.

Eastward the National encampment of the G. A. R. seems to be taking its way. The meeting in 1888 will be held at Columbus, Ohio.

On the 4th of November the Metropolitan police law of Kansas will be argued before the Supreme Court as to its constitutionality.

The Hope Herald speaking of an article in the Abilene Chronicle, says, "This is an especially good time to be on the alert for Democratic tricks." Strange place to look for "Democratic tricks."

The Secretary of the Interior has decided that a young woman who takes up land and falls in love with a young man who has taken up an adjoining claim can marry him without forfeiting her claim.

The rainfall during September, according to records kept at the Agricultural college, was 6.80 inches, the greatest amount that has fallen at this place in any month during all the years the record has been kept.—Manhattan Mercury.

President Cleveland cast his lines in Lake Mendota yesterday. Eight black-bass honored him by inserting his hook in their respective obsequious mouths. No member of the party caught so many fish as the President and no fish weighed so heavily as his. And yet some people doubt Mr. Cleveland's luck.

Here is the mugwump view of it as set forth by the New York Times:

A public reception of the chief magistrate is an entirely proper performance of course and an inevitable incident of such a tour as Mr. Cleveland has undertaken. But there is nothing impressive, graceful or honorable in the spectacle of a man giving his hand day after day to be mauled by promiscuous crowds.

The convention of the Knights of Labor at Minneapolis shows it to be a tremendous organization; a strength of over a half a million of industrious citizens, mostly heads of families, whose numbers increased by nearly 200,000 during the past year. This monster organization has been so well conducted that it leaves no reasonable hope of the opposition to crush it out.

If Judge French had been a Democrat, what virtuous indignation our Republican contemporaries would indulge in behalf of their colored brethren. This is manifest from the fact that they say now, for the purpose of belittling the judges opinion that he was elected as an independent candidate, for whom some Democrats voted.—Emporia Democrat.

The brutal evictions in Iowa, that rival the most revolting outrages in Ireland, should arouse the American people to the great danger that threatens to make the tenant a mere chattel in the hands of foreign landlords. It is hoped that the experience of Iowa will not be repeated in other states. It is not too late to pass stringent laws that will effectually stamp out this attempt to establish European landlordism in our country.

Source of Venality.

When Mr. Blair was asked by the Pacific Railroad Commission how he knew there were some venal legislators, he replied: "By my own experience in the State of New Jersey," and then he added that he sympathized with Jake Sharp because "You know you can't get anything through this city without paying for it." It is all bosh for men like Mr. Blair to try to conceal the source of legislative corruption. Those who seek the jobs must stand as legislators of venality. They cannot maintain their claim to honesty by asserting that they have to pay for "getting things through." What ever has to be gotten through in that way is wanted by corruptionists first. If it were wanted by the people, legislators would not have to be bribed to vote for it.—Philadelphia North American.

Political Economy.

Under the ancient civilization of Egypt, India, Greece and Rome we find evidence of careful observation of the facts of economic science and the occasional defining of sound principles. Aristotle in one of his works first employs the term "political economy" though in a vague way, and propounds some good doctrines which have stood the test of time. The convulsions of the dark ages checked industry and suspended commerce. Feudalism gave birth to the protective system and to manifold grievous monopolies. In the sixteenth century the industrial and commercial activity of the Italian cities prompted a broader and more philosophical investigation of the sources of public prosperity, and with the Italian writers of that and the following centuries systematic political economy had its origin. In England the operations of the East India Company first raised a question as to the soundness of the current notions, and along in the seventeenth century various tracts appeared affirming that the prosperity of states can never be promoted by restrictive regulations or by the depression of their neighbors, and that the self-interest of mankind, not less than their duty, requires them to live in peace and to cultivate a fair and friendly intercourse with each other. In all ages of the world a restrictive policy has impoverished the masses,—created and enriched monopolies.
